Why are projects unsuccessful?

Poor planning and estimation - Inadequate time spent on estimating scope, cost, and duration leads to unrealistic expectations. Planning without clarity on deliverables, resources, and risks often results in overruns and missed objectives.

Misaligned objectives and strategy - Many projects lack clear links to organisational priorities or fail to define critical success factors (CSFs). This misalignment causes confusion and weakens stakeholder support.

Inadequate sponsorship and leadership - Sponsors must own the business case, ensure benefits, and support the project manager. Weak sponsorship leads to poor decision-making and lack of accountability.

Lack of skills and education - Inadequately trained or inexperienced project managers are often a top reason for project failure. Without the authority and capability to manage complexity, projects falter.

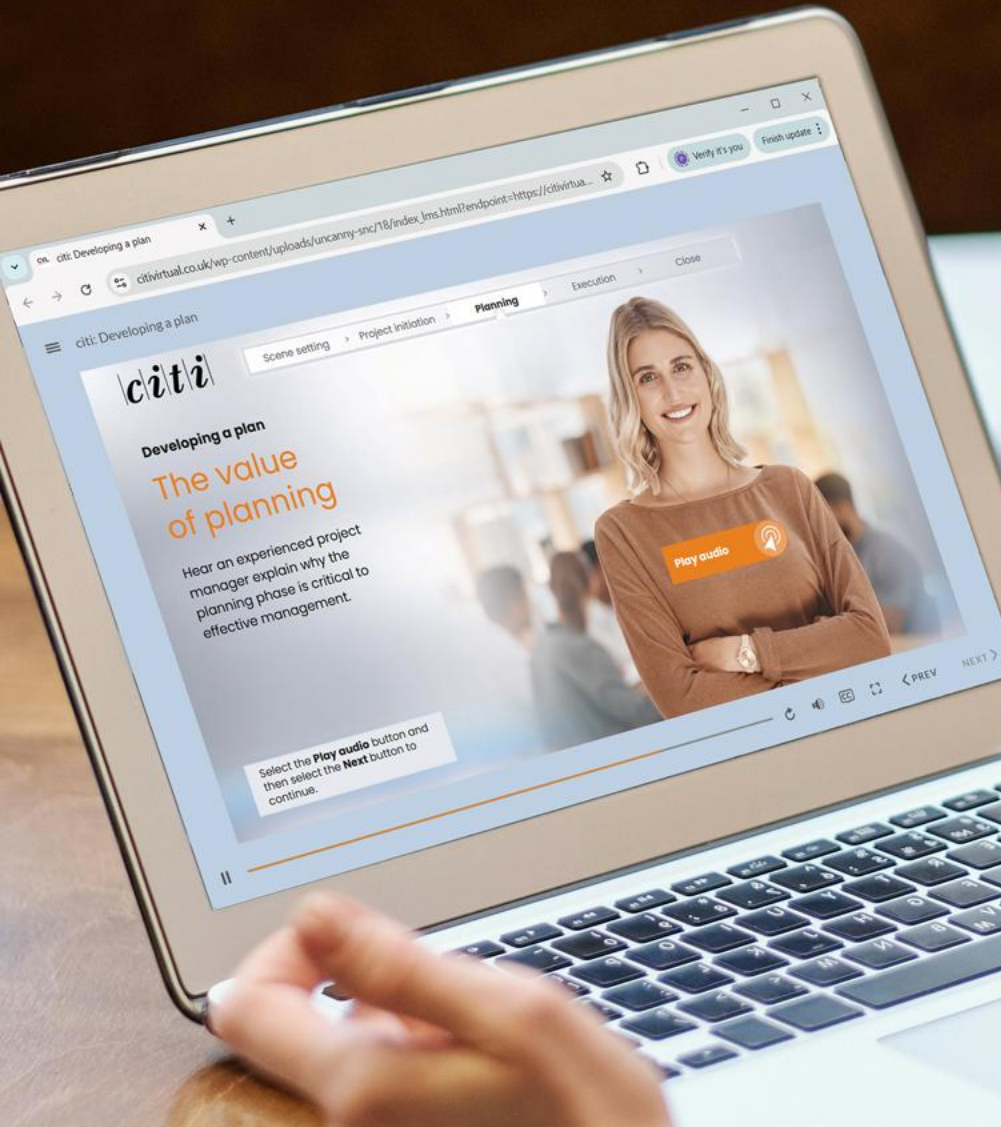

Poor communication and stakeholder engagement - Managing expectations and communicating progress are vital. Failure to do so leads to misunderstandings, resistance, and disengagement.
